

ABSTRACT

Composite structural members, methods, and apparatus for making the same are described. The composite members are formed by resistive heating of the composite material using an electric current with sufficient voltage through the composite. The resistance of the composite material creates an energy loss in the form of heat, melting the matrix of the composite material and allowing the composite material to be shaped in any desired manner.